

Fig. 4.5

Attenuation value ranges of different body substances and tissues. It can be seen that the attenuation value ranges corresponding to the individual substances frequently overlap. Therefore, it is not possible to unambiguously identify the substance from the attenuation value. This applies, in particular, to the different types of tumors